POSTGRADUATE PROGRAM

LANGUAGE EDUCATION FOR REFUGEES AND MIGRANTS

WWW.EAP.GR

Program Aims

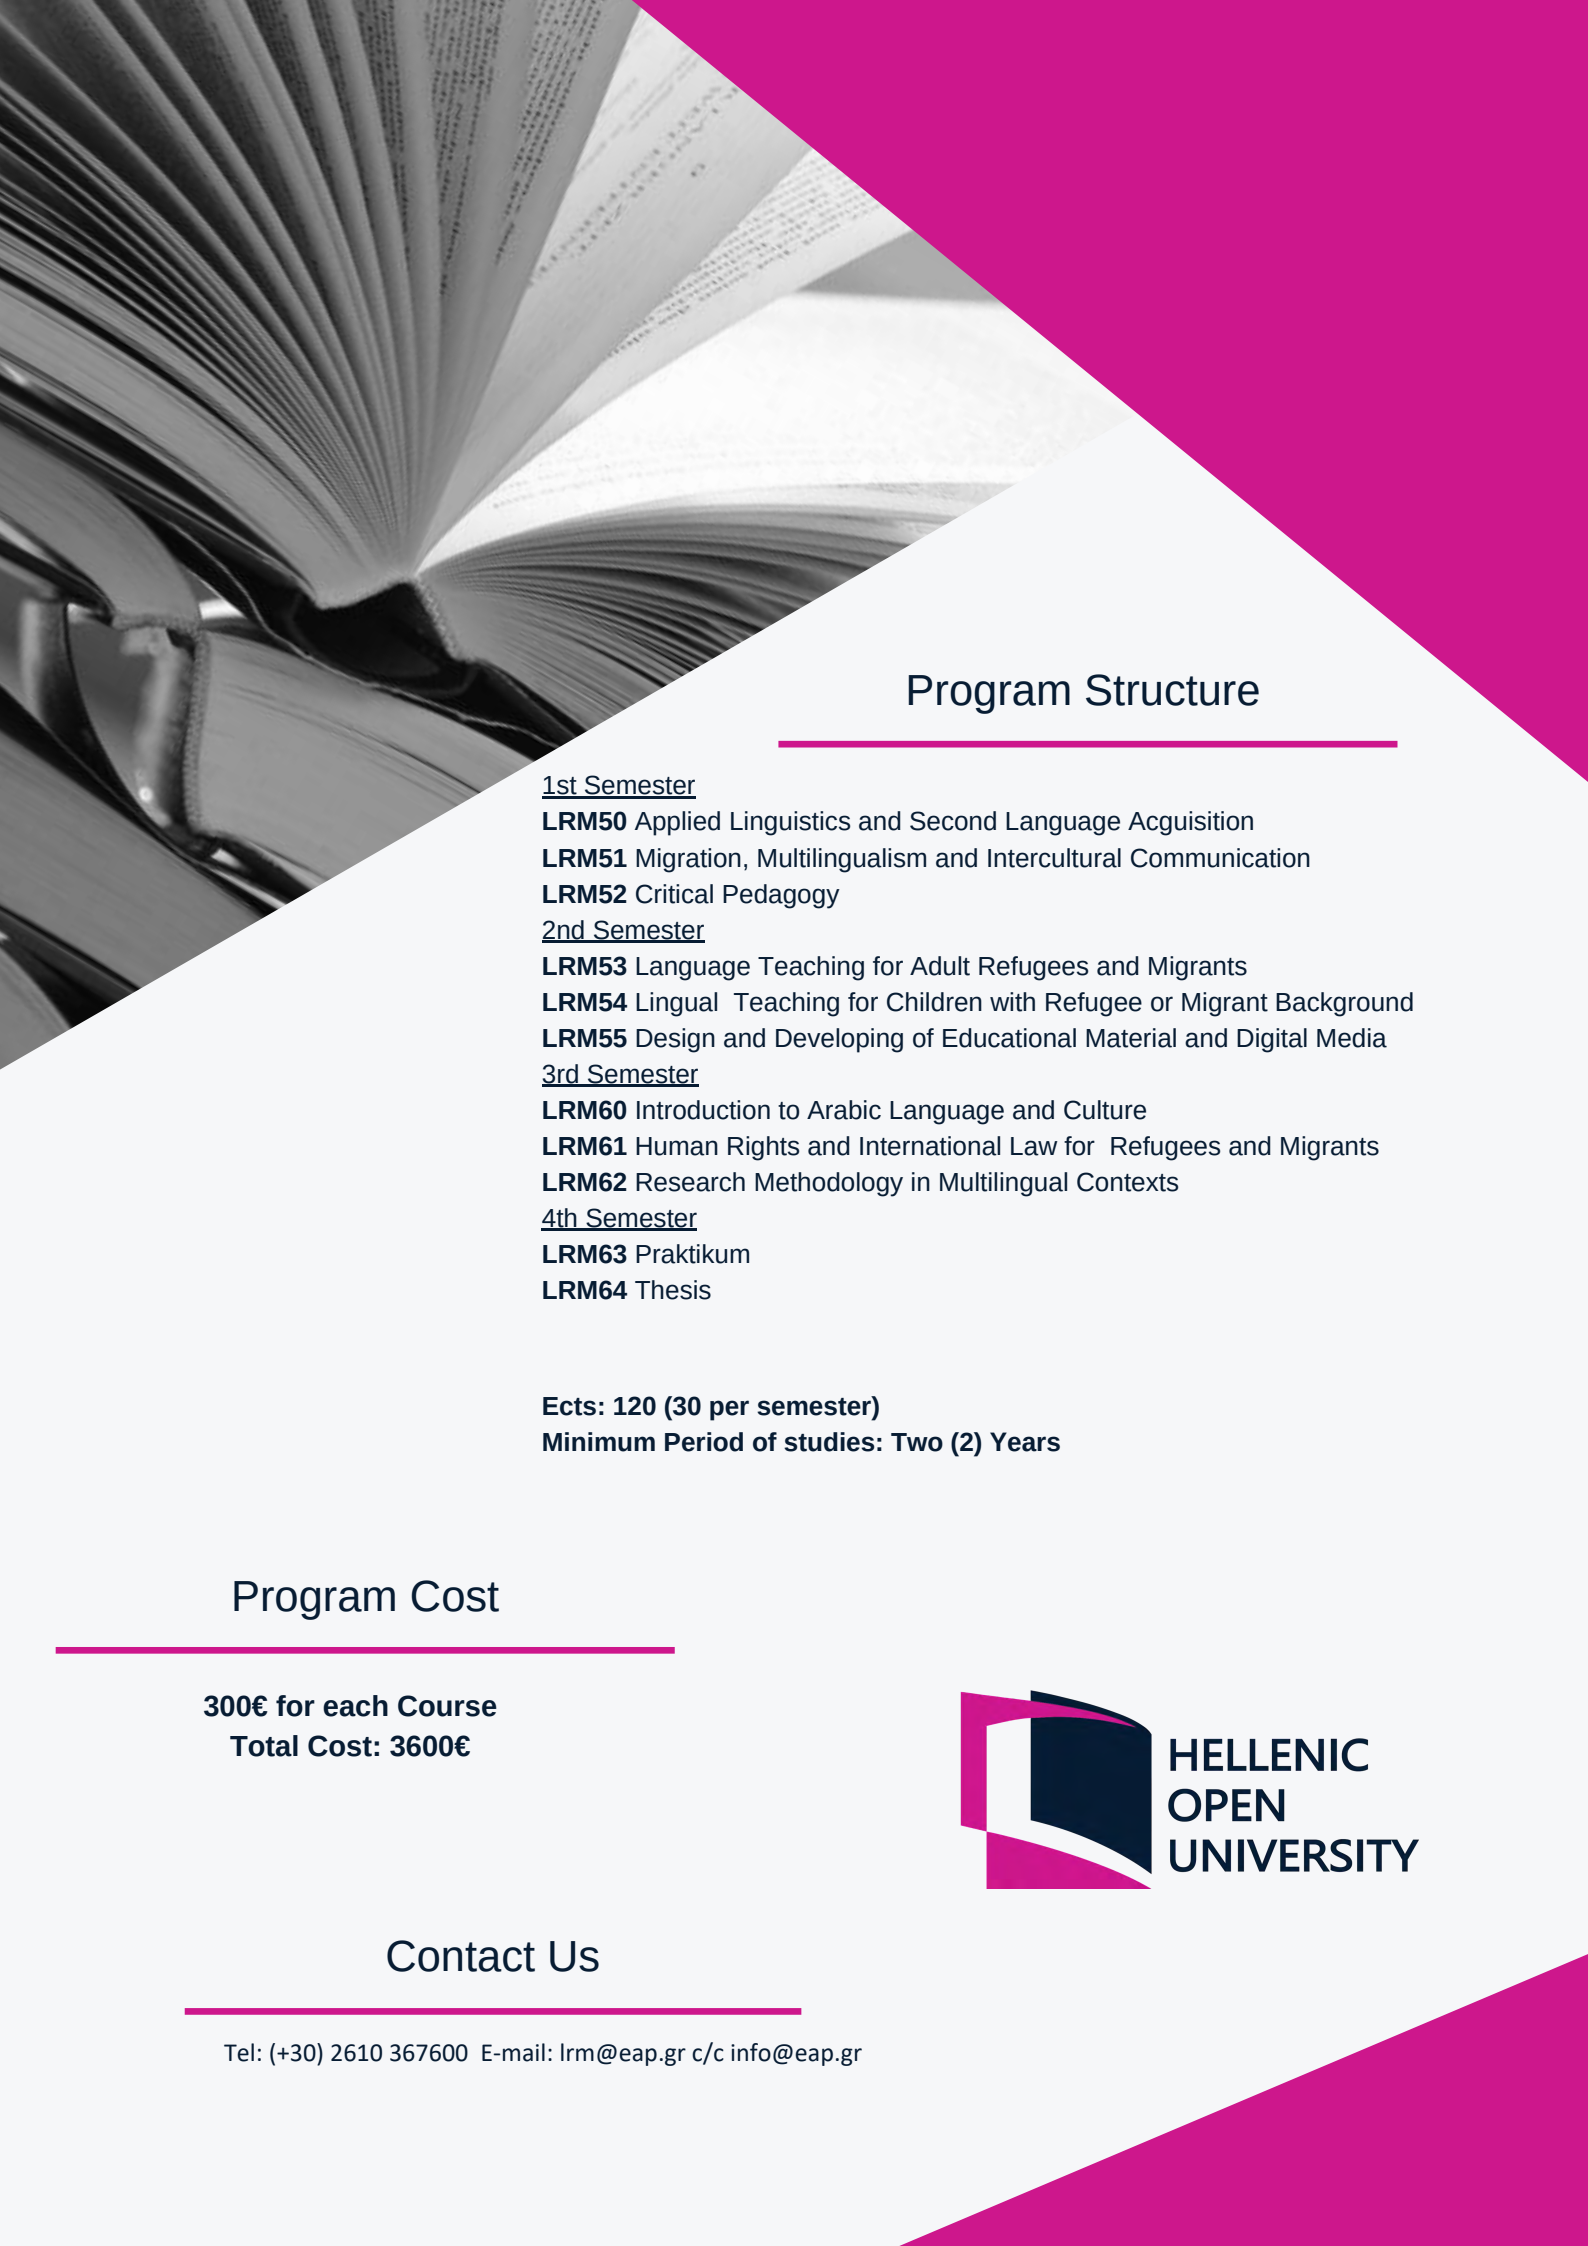

The Program aims at teachers and graduates that desire to enhance their knowledge and skills in teaching linguistics in different languages and to further develop new skills that could be applied to specific contexts and levels. The courses offer postgraduate students a strong theoretical background, the necessary teaching methodology, the ability of course designing, as well as an introduction to major research tools. Another aim is to provide to teachers of different educational backgrounds and university graduates, specialized educational knowledge and enable them to educate teachers that are involved in teaching immigrants. The program trains Greek or foreign students to research and examine basic questions about applied linguistics and second language acquisition in the numerous multilingual environments that they might come across in the future.

Learning outcomes

By successfully completing the program, graduates will be able to:

- Develop a theoretical background that reflects current issues in applied linguistics and related fields.
- Enrich their knowledge in applied linguistics and specialize in second language acquisition, critical literacy and the capitalization of computing and communicative technologies in language learning research.
- Contemplate and further enhance their understanding regarding theoretical and practical issues in language learning and teaching.
- Develop a deeper understanding and new skills regarding language scenarios in schools and non-standard education.
- Advance in new skills, concerning the Arabic language and culture, that would consequently be applied to specific frameworks.
- Obtain a strong theoretical background of the existing bibliography and methodology regarding course development.
- Produce proper educational material on the basis of their students' needs
- Participate in internships which evolve around visiting schools, immigrant accommodation units or institutions related to typical or non-standard education of immigrants, either on a national level or in foreign countries.
