Dr Achilleas Karadimitriou is an Assistant Professor of Journalism and News Content Production in the Department of Communication, Media and Culture at Panteion University. He conducted postdoctoral research on the digital platforms of public service media (Department of Communication and Media Studies—EMME, National and Kapodistrian University of Athens—NKUA), holds a PhD on public service broadcasting policy in Europe and Greece (EMME, NKUA), completed postgraduate studies in television production and news reporting in the United Kingdom (Aberystwyth University), and has been a research associate of the EMME Department since 2010. In parallel, he works as a journalist/fact-checker at the platform Check4facts.gr, led by the National Centre for Social Research (EKKE), and is the co-creator and scientific coordinator of the website politikometro.gr. He has participated in several European research projects addressing cutting-edge issues in the evolution of media, journalism, and communication. His research interests and publications mainly focus on how news and information are framed by news media organisations and social media platforms, journalistic professionalism and practices, the policy and organisation of the broadcasting sector, and fact-checking techniques within the context of the platformisation of communication. From April 2018 to June 2024, he served as an adjunct lecturer and academic fellow (NSRF) in the Department of Communication and Media Studies at the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens. Since October 2014, he has also worked as a lecturer–research associate in the Master’s Programme “Journalism and New Media” within the same Department. He joined the teaching staff of the Hellenic Open University (HOU) Master’s Programme “Contemporary Journalism Studies” in October 2025.
