

Christos Zikopoulos is an Assistant Professor of Operations Management at the Department of Business Administration, Aristotle University of Thessaloniki (A.U.Th.), where he teaches at undergraduate and postgraduate level. He has also taught at a number of other universities, including University of Macedonia, University of Western Macedonia, International Hellenic University and Hellenic Open University.

He holds a Diploma in Mechanical Engineering, an M.Sc in Industrial Engineering and a PhD in Reverse Supply Chains, all from A.U.Th., and has conducted post-doc research at INSEAD Business School.

His work has been published in a number of journals, including European Journal of Operational Research, IIE Transactions, International Journal of Production Economics and International Journal of Production Research.

He has participated either as Principal Investigator or as a Research team member in a number of research projects related to the analysis of logistics and production systems, inventory management, reverse supply chains management, configuration of waste management systems, development of purchasing framework, development of statistical quality control systems, etc.

Also, he has organized or participated as a trainer in executive seminars on Total Quality Management, Playground security and equipment quality assurance, Inventory Management in Organizations and in Industry, Statistical Quality Control in Manufacturing, etc.